the ball last night listened to the finest regard to the band and the orchestra, and every number in the promenade concert program played before the dancing began, received most emphatic applause. The whole musical program was well selected and was the subject of favorable comment on all sides.

Victor Herbert's 22d Regiment Band was at its best. In the opening number, the overture to "Tannhauser," the most deli-cate shading, coupled with a magnificen volume and tone was poticeable. Every in strument seemed with the spirit of th the wonderful proficiency of all the musicians in the aggregation was plainly apparent. In spite of the difficulties of the work, however, it was given with all the skill, expression and volume of tone that has made Gilmore's Eand and its successor, the band of the 22d Regiment of the New York National Guard, one of the best known in the world. In the last number of the promenade concert given by the band, a fantasie of American airs, arranged by Victor Herbert, the band made a decided hit and the number met with decided approval, more, perhaps, than was accorded any other number. accorded any other number.

Too much credit cannot be given Mr. Will
A. Haley for his successful organization of the splendid orchestra that furnished the dance music of the great ball. In spite of the short time he had in which to work the men together, to drill them thoroughly in the numbers selected and to produce an organization capable of playing the music called for by such an event, he succeeded admirably, and there was not the slightes fault to be found with any portion of the music given by his orchestra. The balance ing of the different instruments exactly suited the great hall, while the arrange ment of them made possible the splendid effects brought out. The orchestra gave as its first number, the second in the promenade concert program, a selection from "Faust," embracing all of Gounod's most beautiful airs in that work. As soon as the first strains were heard it was plainly the first strains were heard it was plainly apparent that the immense body of musicians was fully up to all the requirements. In Luitner's overture, "Fest," the orchestra showed an ability to interpret delicate passages with consummate skill, while in the more florid variations the volume of exquisits sound penetrated overs. ume of exquisite sound penetrated every nook and corner of the immense court. As the closing number of this part of the program a number of selections from the opera "Wizard of the Nile" were given, the lively number being followed by a hearty round of applause. The efforts of both band and orchestra were thoroughly appreciated by the great agentyles. appreciated by the great assemblage that was present, and when after the departure was present, and when after the departure of the Iresidential party the crowd had begun to thin out, dancing was indulged in, the excellence of the orchestra for that class of work was plainly demonstrated, and those who had attended previous inauguration balls were emphatic in their declaration that never had such dancing music been heard before in an inventor. music been heard before in an inaugura-tion ball room. Both bodies of musicians were larger than on any similar occasion, the band numbering sixty-five and the or-chestra one hundred and twenty-five musicians. A pleasant little incident occurred with the orchestra just before the time for beginning the program, when Mr. Goodman

On every side were heard expressions of admiration for the excellent work done on every committee. There never were more zealous workers and probably there never were committees which had harder work, surmounted more obstacles and accomplished better results. Mr. Charles J. Bell, upon whose shoulders so much depended at the moment of the reception of the President and Mrs. McKinley, was equal to all the demands. Mr. Edward McCauley, chairman of the floor committee, had an Thompson, chairman of the finance committee, was one of the earliest of the com mitteemen on the scene and had the pleas ure of again assisting in the splendid man-agement of an inaugural entirely success-

Arrangements for the great banquet at the ball were all perfect, the crowds being handled in a most systematic manner, and it is safe to say that this feature of the occasion surpassed any banquet on a similar occasion in the past. The menu was a particularly long one, but so thoroughly had the preliminaries been attended to that it was served in a manner belitting the dignity and elegance of the ball. The tables upon which it was served were put in place in the lower corridor of the building along the north side, and in the rooms as well as the halls. Each table was twenty-four feet in length, so that there were ample accommodations for several hundred people at a time. Caterer Essner had provided a force of 125 skilled walters, and these were supplemented by a number of the most efficient of this class of help in the city. The committee on banquet, of which Gen. George B. Will-iams was the chairman, had worked for mouths, and their selection of Mr. Essner to supply this important feature of the festivities was a happy one. Apant from the preliminary arrangements for the banquet, the manner in which it was served was perfect, and general satisfaction was expressed by every one who partook of it.

If the members of the diplomatic corps had had any idea of the honor that was in store for them in being presented to the President and Mrs. McKinley before any of the distinguished guests of the evening instead of the few couples mentioned who had that pleasure there would not have been a notable absentee. When they did come later they expressed much surprise and great regret that no intimation had been given them of this particular arrangement in advance. rangement in advance. Because of the fact that the rooms set aside for the newspaper writers, of whom a score or two were busily engaged until far past midnight, were provided with chairs, a stream of peeple poured in and out and enjoyed the comparative quiet of their neighborhood off and on during the evening. trifle and there was an opportunity to start the dancing, which was carried on with spirit from one end of the big ball room to the other. Chairs were dragged out from the side rooms and a fringe of seated grests looked on the moving pictures, gay with life and color. The neighborhood of the supper room was another animated section during this period.

Secretary Olney was the only member of Mr. Cleveland's cabinet who attended the ball: of the McKinley cabinet. Judge McKenna, General Alger, with his wife and daughter, and Mr. Gage, with Mrs. Gage, and other ladies were present.

The dressing was generally conceded to be more elegant than has been the custom at any large public event. So far from wearing their oldest new clothes, hundreds of those prominent in the smartest West End sets eclipsed all former records by not only donning their finest gowns, but were equally generous in adorning themselves with their finest jewels. Light dresses, and, in fact, nearly all white dresses, seemed to be the popular fancy and gave to the moving multitude almost as dainty and del-icate an effect as the white and flowerladen walls. The dresses worn by Mrs. Mc-Kinley, Mrs. Hobart and the ladies of the coming new cabinet were especially elegant, representing not only the newest fusitors, but the most artistic materials. Mrs. Mc-Kinley were a high-necked dress, while Mrs. Hobart made her first Kinley wore a high-necked dress, while Mrs. Hobart made her first appearance at a social event at the capital in a low-necked dress and wore almost as many fewels as did Mrs. Mark Hanna, Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. L. One of these was Old Glory portrayed in red, white and blue incandescent lamps. The flag was hung high up on the west ball at the center, and by a mechanical contrivance consisting of automatic alternating currents was made to flutter, a very realistic mitation of the flag waving in a stiff breeze. The coats-of-arms of the various states occupied prominent places on the railing of the first balcony, surrounded by American flags and flowers and evergreens in which were placed tiny vari-colored in-candescent globes.

Probably the finest decorative feature of tives: Two years ago you were summone! to your share of a legislative work which could not be otherwise than disagreeable, disappointing and unsatisfactory, for it involved a dismal struggle to adapt a narrowing income to the growing wants of a great nation, growing to be still greater. You were, most of you, untried in your new vocation. How others have performed their share of the task it is not for us to say. But it is proper for me to say that your share of the divided duty has been performed with so much readiness and good sense that even among the asperities of a heated campaign there was no room for any attack upon the House of Repre-

"I am sincerely grateful for the kind expression of your confidence and esteem; but I am still more grateful for the daily kindness and good will on the part of every member on both sides of the House. "To all of you, then, gentlemen, of all parties, I offer the sincere expression of the highest personal regard."
